A clean slate every day.....

Start work daily the first day of one's career: it decreases monotony and enhances productivity.

Most of us do the same thing again and again for years together. A chef cooks for customers in a certain pattern every day. A math teacher teaches the same chapters every year. A specialist surgeon performs the same type of surgery every day. A pilot follows the same path. Similarly, the computer engineer, lifts operator and so on have the routine. It is natural that boredom easily clings on and a monotony sets in soon. This has several repercussions.

A tour guide who has been doing the same day trips everyday to the same place for the past seven years. Surprisingly he has a genuine smile and a cheerful face. When he was gently probed he said "For me, it's one of those thousand trips but for you guys, it is the first trip and probably the only one. You may not come again. So everyday I imagine myself as if I am taking my dear friends for the first time to this place and kind of make it interesting.

Similarly for Tendulkar once revealed that every match and every ball he faced was new for him.

This attitude of starting every day's work as if it is the first day of one's career can improve our performance and most importantly decrease monotony at work.

After all, it is one great life and it is worth spending every day with excitement and energy..

And the single mantra for this is, "Do it every time as if you are doing it for the first time.

Thank you!
